1. The letters enclosed with reference dispatch were mailed as requested the day following their receipt here. We should appreciate your letting us know if any reaction is observed in the field.

2. It was the consensus of the appropriate authorities here that ☐ had done an excellent job in presenting this project to you and to the Home Office, and that it was based upon altogether sound reasoning and a thorough knowledge of the Czech scene.

3. It was felt, however, that the letters themselves were perhaps a little too broad—not sufficiently subtle to deceive a sophisticated intelligence system. It is the feeling here that such projects in the future would have more chance of success if they were carried out over a longer period of time with a number of more subtly-phrased communications.

4. Your reaction to this altogether friendly criticism will be appreciated.
